- Candide and other stories of plays, prose of The Writer and Poems Player and other stories Penguin Book of World War I Stories by Johann Wolfgang von Goethe Selected essays, poems and other writings portable Sixties Reader Oroonoko, Rover, and other works collected by short fiction, Volume I Russian magical tales from Pushkin to Platonov American poetry: #66 of the nineteenth century 1896-1904 Mark Twain and Charles Dudley Warner Village Stepanchikovo Vladimir Petrovich Woldemar, 16-year-old, is in the country with his family and meets zinaida Alexandrovna Syasyakina, a beautiful 21-year-old woman, staying with her mother, Princess Sayakina, in the wing. This family, like many Russian minor nobility with royal ties of the time, were granted only a degree of respectability because of their name; In the case of this story, the family is very poor. Young Vladimir irrevocably falls in love with zinaida, who has many other (socially more suitable) suitors, which he joins in their difficult and often fruitless search for favor of the young lady. For other purposes, see First Love (disambiguation). The first love of the author Ivan Turgenev Original title First Love Love (Pervaya) lyubov) - a novel by Ivan Turgenev, first published in 1860. This is one of his most popular works of short fiction. It tells a love story between a 21-year-old girl and a 16-year-old boy. Reference First Love was published in March 1860 in the Reader's Library. Like many of Turgenev's works, this work is very autobiographical. Indeed, the author claimed that this is the most autobiographical of all his works. Here Turgenev recounts the case from his own life, his fascination with the young neighbor in the country, Ekaterina Shakovskaya (Sinaida story), a fascination that lasted until his discovery that Catherine was in fact the mistress of her father. Critics were divided. Some criticized his light subject, which did not address any of the pressing social and political issues of the time. Others denounced the illegality of the subject, namely a father and son in love with the same woman and a young woman who was the mistress of a married man. But he had many admirers, including the French writer Gustave Flaubert, who gushed in a letter to Turgenev: What an exciting girl that zinochka Sinaida has! Countess Lambert, a close acquaintance of Turgenev, told the author that the Russian emperor himself had read the story to the Empress and was delighted with her. The central characters of Vladimir Petrovich - the narrator, during the story a 16-year-old boy; the protagonist of the story. The object of Vladimir's affections is the object of Vladimir's affections. Capricious, mocking and difficult, she in his affections for his suitors, to which Vladimir shows (externally) the most love. However, it is the sister's attachment to her brother, not between lovers. Peter Vasiljevic - Vladimir's father, a stoic symbol of 19th century masculinity; very British in outlook and apparently immune to emotions, but the object of quiet admiration for the son of Turgenev's English translations, Ivan. The first love of the public domain audiobook on LibriVox Full text of first love in the original Russian language in the Internet library Alexey Komarov obtained from the (novella) oldid-975975325 James Vescovi, English teacherAs many of us high school students often attract stories with characters going through similar problems and changes in life. I found some success teaching Alan Sillitoe in the novella The Loneliness of the Long Runner (1959), whose 17-year-old hero from a working-class home, Colin Smith, was caught burgling and sent to a reform school. After discovering Smith's gift for running, school officials put him in a cross-country race. His victory would bring the institution great prestige. Smith must decide whether to play by the rules of society (and win the race) or rebel against those rules because he rejects society (and quit races). Another fascinating story with the main character-teenager - First Love Ivan Turgenev. Although published more than 150 years ago, the story poignantly describes the intense joy and searing pain that everyone falls in love with for the first time. If that's not complicated enough, the book's protagonist, Vladimir, falls in love with an aristocratic girl five years his eldest, who himself is now court suitors three times his age. Beautiful Sinaida does a lot to dissuade and dissuade Vladimir's attention, sometimes treating him like a younger brother, but in other moments hinting that he loves him most. In one scene, she orders him, if he really loves her, to jump off a high wall. I flew down, just as if someone had given me a violent push from behind, he recounts. The boy hits the ground with such force that for a moment loses to the side. He wakes up to choke his face with kisses. How could you do that, darling; How could you obey? She's screaming. You know, I love you. What an ecstasy! But she dissolves when she realizes that he keeps his eyes closed even after he regains consciousness in order to expand her attachment. She orders him to return home as a boy who is responding to her. Despite the devastating end of the story - Vladimir discovers that he is having an affair with his own father - the question of what exactly zinaida feels for the 16-year-old, and has not clarified. It's a mystery that makes for a thought-provoking essay issue in which I ask students to invent a word that describes the feelings/love/love zinaida has for her young fiance. This call for creativity has produced some wonderful essays, not to mention unique words, three of which I share here: (tleave) a combination of true love and teasing; (anaxia) love is rooted in feelings of resentment, curiosity and wishful thinking; and (mandurah) love not without passion, but without confidence. Confidence.
